

The Central Race

Every life form is a nodal element on a vast network that permeates the universes of spacetime. In other words, there is a connective link, but that link has familial connections beginning at the Sovereign across spacetime. Family, "tribes", associations (group soul) -- these are next in line. These links constitute how a species is connected at an individual level.

And then there are secondary linkages to other species, and these linkages are to both earth-bound species and extraterrestrial -- species that have a resonant vibration to the Sovereign. A Sovereign can have a million inbound linkages and a few dozen outbound, or vice versa. They are not balanced one for one. They are always asymmetrical, it's just a matter of degree.

In general, the Central Race is not vibrationally resonant with human-embodied Sovereigns. Direct linkages are extremely rare. They occur through a complex "routing system," and this is not well understood by anyone. It operates in the unknown realms. All I can tell you is that I believe this connection between the Central Race and the earth system at large is dependent on the Grand Portal experience. In other words, as Sovereigns become conscious of their true nature as embodied human beings, they will also open up new, latent connections with other sovereigns across spacetime, to include the Central Race.

Ironically, this growing resonance with the Central Race is precisely what obviates the need for intervention of any kind. As the earth resonance attunes to the Central Race, it then needs no intervention. This occurs over vast timescapes. It is not something that happens over generational efforts, wars, galactic infighting, good guys beating the bad guys, etc. It is a vibrational resonance, and this can only occur when a species discovers and passes through the Grand Portal.

There will always be some fraction of a species that resists this innate calling. This is their role. They are the "brakes" on the car that is speeding towards the Grand Portal. They provide a balance, without which, the "car" called humanity could crash. You would not want to drive a car without a braking system.

An entire species is like a car. If the car is operating at light speed it can go only one direction -- a straight line. And the pathways to higher resonance fields are never situated as a straight line. They curve and undulate. There is a modulation to them that requires brakes and maneuvering, all of which seems to add time to the equation of the journey, but spacetime is completely relative to one's vibrational state.
